Purpose

This report provides an update on the implementation of the Child and Youth Wellbeing Strategy¹ (the Strategy) and its Programme of Action for the July 2020 - December 2020 period. It details what activity was carried out in this period to bring the Strategy into effect; that is, how agencies and non-government organisations are aligning to the Strategy framework, and the progress of the particular policies and initiatives underway across government to help achieve the Strategy's vision and outcomes.

This report is an input into the upcoming Annual Report on the Strategy which will report on progress against the Strategy's outcomes and include initial data on its Child and Youth Wellbeing indicators.² It provides an update on key achievements in the Programme of Action during the July to December 2020 period. This is followed by a brief description of the extent to which central government agencies are aligning to the Strategy framework (Signs of central agency alignment, p. 24), and examples where non-government actors have used the framework in their work (Collective action beyond central government, p. 25).

The previous implementation report, covering the period 1 July 2019 - 30 June 2020, was proactively released in September 2020. That report is available at the following link:

<https://childyouthwellbeing.govt.nz/resources/monitoring-report-implementation-child-and-youth-wellbeing-strategy-1-july-2019-30-june>

Progress in the Programme of Action

Overall, good progress has been made in implementing the actions during this period. While some actions have been delayed, in part as a result of COVID-19, others have been scaled up and refocused in response to COVID-19.

The following significant new initiatives have also been added to the programme:

- Support for young children to improve their self-regulation, resilience, and social skills
- Participation of Youth Justice Victims in Family Group Conferences
- Expansion of Mana Ake

A national action plan against racism will also be developed as part of the Government work programme to address racism and discrimination.

New approaches, prototypes and pilots

A number of initiatives explore new approaches to the design and delivery of services, in keeping with the principles of the Strategy. For example:

- 38 Curriculum Lead roles were established to work with schools, kura, centre-based early learning services and kōhanga reo, to support the health and wellbeing of learners
- the Enhanced Well Child Tamariki Ora support pilots, the first of which is Tiaki Whānau in Lakes DHB, are providing more holistic support to young parents and whānau with greater needs by involving a kaitiaki, supported by a broader team
- a significant investment ($42.2 million) is being made in the Ngā Tini Whetū programme, a cross-agency initiative for whānau who need extra support. When fully operationalised (by mid-2021), this will see additional early support offered to approximately 800 whānau
- under the Intensive (Whānau) Response action, Te Kei o Te Waka (an iwi-led intensive intervention model) was launched in Tokoroa.

1 For further information about the Child and Youth Wellbeing Strategy, please refer to the Strategy's website: <https://childyouthwellbeing.govt.nz/>

2 For each outcome set out in the Strategy, there is a set of indicators to measure progress on the outcome. For further information on the Child and Youth Wellbeing Indicators, please refer to the Strategy's website: <https://childyouthwellbeing.govt.nz/measuring-success/indicators>

Progress on system wide changes

Progress has also been made on a number of large-scale system changes. For example:

- as part of the Overhaul the welfare system action, the Minister for Social Development and Employment has made decisions on next steps for the foundations of the welfare system
- progress was made across a number of actions in the Youth Plan 2020-2022, to help incorporate youth voice and perspectives into government work
- the National Education and Learning Priorities and Tertiary Education Strategy have both been released, and a draft action plan developed for the Education Workforce Strategy.

A wider range of supports to students has been introduced, including:

- Free access to period products in schools started in Term 3, 2020
- the Code of pastoral care for domestic tertiary students is building the capability of tertiary education providers to support their learners' wellbeing.

Under the Learning Support Action Plan initiative, a range of actions to provide earlier support and strengthen an inclusive education system have been progressed, such as:

- the roll-out of Learning Support Coordinator roles
- providing additional funding to support students with high and complex learning needs.

Impacts of COVID-19

The redeployment of resources to support the COVID-19 response impacted the progress of some actions. This included delays to:

- the roll-out of initiatives like the Kea Project (Ara Poutama Aotearoa's Whānau Visits Experience pilot), and Changes to teaching New Zealand history in schools and kura
- the expansion and enhancement of School-Based Health Services (nurses in schools) to decile 5 schools (although this is now fully implemented and is available to 96,700 students across nearly 300 schools)
- an action to make resilience-building and mindfulness resources available in schools (however additional funding was provided to develop a toolkit for parents and whānau to support their children at home). Work to develop the wellbeing resources for schools has since recommenced
- the WhatAboutMe? survey. Data collection for the survey was scheduled to take place from March to September 2020 but is now scheduled for the same time in 2021.

Some existing actions are also being scaled up to support the COVID-19 response – for example, Ka Ora, Ka Ako: free and healthy school lunch programme is to be expanded to around 200,000 children during 2021.

Alignment to the Strategy Framework

Signs of central government alignment

In July 2019, Cabinet endorsed the Strategy as an overarching framework for central government policy development and services for children and young people. This set the expectation that the Strategy would drive decision-making and alignment for child and youth wellbeing across all agencies working in this area.

While there is still further work to do, there are some good examples of agency alignment to the Strategy in this period. It has been used in the following ways:

Inform strategic thinking and business planning

- Oranga Tamariki developed a new outcomes framework setting out how its goals and emerging operating model will align with the Strategy's vision and outcomes.
- The Ministry of Justice published its 2019-2024 Statement of Intent (updated 30 June 2020), explicitly outlining its contribution to the Strategy. The Strategy will again inform its next round of strategic planning.
- The Ministry of Housing and Urban Development intends to use the Strategy framework in the refresh of its Statement of Intent.

Shape work programmes

- Statistics NZ is using the Strategy framework to inform the stocktake of essential data assets, and to identify critical data gaps for children and young people in the development of its Data Investment Plan. Work is also underway to bring the Strategy's indicators and Ngā Tūtohu Aotearoa (Indicators Aotearoa New Zealand) into closer alignment.
- Ara Poutama Aotearoa – the Department of Corrections is aligning its development of a young adult framework to the Strategy.
- The Ministry of Housing and Urban Development will refer to the Strategy in the National Policy Statement on Housing and Urban Development, currently in development, that sets out objectives and policies for housing and urban development under the Resource Management Act 1991.
- The Ministry of Health is prompting DHBs to align with the Strategy by:
 - expecting DHBs to report on the performance measures and Crown Funding Agreement variations relating to child and youth wellbeing
 - incorporating the Strategy framework into the 2021/22 DHB Annual Plan and Planning Priorities Guidance document (with a particular focus on improving equity of outcomes)
 - requiring DHB annual plans to consider the principles promoting wellbeing and equity for all children and young people in all their activities, and preparing the health and disability sector for system transformation over time
 - updating the 2021/22 Operational Policy Framework and Service Coverage Schedule to include the Strategy as a priority work programme.
- The Ministry of Health is also using the Strategy framework in the School-Based Health Services (SBHS) Enhancements Programme, influencing:
 - Te Tatau Kitenga, the National Youth Health Leadership Group, which is using the Strategy to inform its advice to the Ministry on SBHS
 - Malatest International, an external evaluation provider, which is using the Strategy as the foundation for the evaluation framework for SBHS, and a source of measures and indicators
 - SBHS quality, reporting and monitoring frameworks used in the SBHS service specification, funding and contracting.
- The Office of the Children's Commissioner worked with the Child Wellbeing Unit (Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet) to develop a guide to help agencies and organisations align to the Strategy framework.

- The Independent Children’s Monitor developed an outcomes framework that draws on the six wellbeing outcomes from the Strategy, as well as incorporating key dimensions from the Whānau Ora Outcomes Framework and the Oranga Tamariki Outcomes Framework.

Collective action beyond central government

The Strategy aims to unify efforts across society to improve the wellbeing of children and young people, and mobilise collective action. This section provides examples of activity underway to activate the Strategy in communities.

Charities/philanthropy organisations

- St John New Zealand used the Strategy framework to guide the development/enhancement of its youth programmes, established a Youth Advisory Panel, and is looking to ensure its wider work reflects the Strategy.
- TSB Community Trust used the Strategy when designing its own child and youth wellbeing strategy for the granting activity the Trust is looking to prioritise.
- The Growing Up in New Zealand longitudinal study discussed the alignment between its conceptual framework and the Strategy framework in its latest report, Now We Are Eight, and signposted how the study’s findings can help to inform work under the Strategy.
- Inspiring Communities worked with the Child Wellbeing Unit to develop a set of practical guides to support child and youth-focused, community-led efforts in communities.

Local government

- Wellington City Council used the Strategy framework to guide engagement with children and will draw on the framework as it develops its own strategy for children and young people. The Strategy will also be used to identify areas where Council can work more closely with other agencies or community groups.
- Taituarā — Local Government Professionals Aotearoa (previously SOLGM) worked with the Child Wellbeing Unit to support councils wanting to align their strategic and long-term planning and spending with the Strategy. This included the development of an online platform for local government highlighting the importance of the Child and Youth Wellbeing Strategy and local government alignment with wellbeing initiatives.
- Local Government New Zealand (LGNZ) shared key messages regarding child wellbeing and the significance of the Strategy with the governors of New Zealand’s councils, and increased awareness of the Strategy through their digital communication channels.
- The Southern Initiative (TSI) and the Auckland Co-design Lab are using the Child and Youth Wellbeing Strategy as a lens for their work, including building an ‘anchor’ network in Wellington with those who have a remit around child and youth wellbeing
- Their work aims to build understand of what it looks like to enable the Strategy in place, including highlighting the potential to enhance social, cultural, economic and environmental conditions impacting on child and youth wellbeing. For example, through its Tamariki Wellbeing work programme, the TSI is supporting innovation partners such as Work and Income, Plunket, Papakura Marae and Auckland Libraries to explore how they can live out the strategy by strengthening the system of support around parents and whānau, to ensure tamariki are “loved, safe and nurtured”, particularly in the first 1,000 days.
