

Social Policy Journal of New Zealand

Te Puna Whakaaro

Issue 37 June 2011

Children's Perceptions of Violence

Cultural Identity and Pregnancy/Parenthood by Age 20

"Boot Camps?" –The Limited Service Volunteers Programme

School and Youth Offending

The Influence of the 1988 Royal Commission on Social Policy

Attitudes towards Social Citizenship

Rural Families, Industry Change and Social Capital

Perceptions of Poverty and Income Inequalities

Refugee Groups and Public Health

Families with Alcohol and other Drug Addiction

Social Indicators and Social Reporting

Social and Recreational Travel: CO<sub>2</sub> Emissions

ISSN 1172-4382

CONTENTS

Foreword

CHILDREN AND YOUNG PEOPLE

Children's Perceptions of Violence: The Nature, Extent and Impact of their Experiences

Janis Carroll-Lind, James Chapman, Juliana Raskauskas

Cultural Identity and Pregnancy/Parenthood by Age 20: Evidence from a New Zealand Birth Cohort

Dannette Marie, David M. Fergusson, Joseph M. Boden

"What Do Boot Camps Really Achieve?" – A Means-End Analysis of the Limited Service Volunteers Programme

Robert Maxwell

The Relationship between School and Youth Offending

Alison Sutherland

SOCIAL POLICY, SOCIAL CAPITAL AND CITIZENSHIP

Still Kicking? The Royal Commission on Social Policy, 20 Years On

Jo Barnes, Paul Harris

Neo-liberal Reform and Attitudes towards Social Citizenship: A Review of New Zealand Public Opinion Data 1987–2005

Louise Humpage

Rural Families, Industry Change and Social Capital: Some Considerations for Policy

Kaylene Sampson, Colin Goodrich, Ruth McManus

The Widening Gap: Perceptions of Poverty and Income Inequalities and Implications for Health and Social Outcomes

Penelope Carroll, Sally Casswell, John Huakau, Philippa Howden-Chapman, Paul Perry

HEALTH

Public Health System Responsiveness to Refugee Groups in New Zealand: Activation from the Bottom Up

Annette Mortensen

Family Functioning in Families with Alcohol and other Drug Addiction

Gabriele Schäfer

SOCIAL INDICATORS

Social Indicators and Social Reporting in New Zealand, and the Potential Contribution of the Family Whānau and Wellbeing Project

Gerard Cotterell, Charles Crothers

THE ENVIRONMENT

Social and Recreational Travel: The Destinations, Travel Modes and CO<sub>2</sub> Emissions of New Zealand Households

Karen Witten, John Huakau, Suzanne Mavoa

FOREWORD

Issue 37 of the Social Policy Journal of New Zealand comprises research papers on a wide range of topics with implications for policy across the social sector.

Research relating to children is always of interest as policies increasingly focus on early interventions. The article by Janis Carroll-Lind, James Chapman and Juliana Raskauskas discusses the findings of a national survey of children's perceptions of violence experienced or witnessed at home, school and in the community, including the extent to which they used violence in their own interpersonal relationships.

Three of the articles in this issue explore research relating to young people: the correlates of early pregnancy, a programme for long-term unemployed and the factors in youth offending. Dannette Marie, David M. Fergusson and Joseph M. Boden report on findings from the longitudinal Christchurch Health and Development Study on the associations between ethnic identity and pregnancy/parenthood by age 20. Robert Maxwell's article is about the outcomes of a programme called Limited Service Volunteers run by the Army at Burnham Military Camp that provides motivational intervention for the unemployed. In the course of Alison Sutherland's research, she spoke at length with serious young offenders about their perceptions of their school experience, concluding that schools might have a real opportunity to break off a young person's trajectory towards youth offending by identifying it early on and intervening in a timely fashion.

Social policy, social capital and citizenship make up another theme for this issue. In an analysis of the Report of the Royal Commission on Social Policy, over two decades since its publication in 1988, Jo Barnes and the late Paul Harris find the document has had a significant impact on policy and debate in New Zealand. Louise Humpage reviews a 20-year span of New Zealanders' attitudes towards social rights of citizenship, and finds evidence that – despite a period of neo-liberal reform and the current tendency to favour tax cuts over redistribution and wage controls – New Zealanders are not willing to sacrifice social spending on health, education and targeted social assistance. In a paper that explores some similar ideas, Penelope Carroll, Sally Casswell, John Huakau, Philippa Howden-Chapman and Paul Perry look at public perceptions of poverty and inequality in New Zealand, how these ideas influence what kinds of assistance they are willing to spend their tax money on, and the implications of this for health and social outcomes. Kaylene Sampson, Colin Goodrich and Ruth McManus study the significant changes affecting New Zealand's rural economy and rural communities, and the buffering role of social capital. Their article focuses on the experiences of 12 families trying to resolve the dilemmas accompanying local industry change.

Health issues are addressed in two pieces of research. Annette Mortensen explores the situation of refugees in New Zealand, finding that they are prioritised to come here because of their high health and social needs, and that this is proving a challenge to health institutions. Gabriele Schäfer's research explores the impact of alcohol and other drug addiction on families and communities through in-depth interviews with residents and ex-residents of a rehabilitation facility, finding painful and traumatic childhoods in their families-of-origin as well as disrupted current familial relationships.

Gerard Cotterell and Charles Crothers review the use of social indicators in New Zealand, focusing on the increased capacity and value to be found in recent developments. In an article addressing environmental issues, Karen Witten, John Huakau and Suzanne Mavoa discuss the findings of a travel survey, focusing on the implications of household travel for social purposes (visiting family and friends) and recreation – travel which is less amenable to the demand management strategies used in work and school settings

I hope you will agree with me that Issue 37 provides something of interest to everyone, and find this issue to be an enjoyable and stimulating read.

Sue Mackwell
Deputy Chief Executive
Social Services Policy and Social Services Strategy